From the Director's Desk: The Reading Experience

I am taking an on-line course called Opening the Book. The aim of the class is to improve the participant's ability to speak with people about books.

Opening the Books starts with a novel premise—the key to speaking with people about books is to talk about the experience of reading. The book urges librarians to ask why, how and where people read, and how reading fits into their lives.

What does the popularity of e-books say about the type of experience readers are seeking? Many of the people I've helped purchased their e-book readers for convenience. They like the idea that they can instantaneously have a book of their choosing downloaded to their reader. One person was thrilled to find she could download a library e-book from her winter home in Florida. Some e-book owners like the fact that they won't have to stuff their suitcases with books when they are travelling. They can easily have more books on their e-readers than they could ever fit in a suitcase. Other readers like the fact that you can adjust the print size of an e-book to suit your comfort.

All of these benefits are part of the e-book experience. Unfortunately there are also some undesirable aspects of using an e-book. Depending on your comfort with using technology your e-reader may not be so easy to use. Some people have been unable to retrieve their e-book from the "cloud". Depending on which e-reader you are using you need either a wireless or a wired internet connection to transfer your e-book to the e-book reader. And you can only read those e-books that are compatible with your e-reader.

Now consider the reading experience

I had last week at the library. I was reading an article about great pigs in literature, and I was inspired to read Babe- the Sheep Pig by Dick King-Smith. The library had a copy of this book, and I was able to easily find it on the shelf and start reading it in a few minutes. It was a great experience—no downloading, no selecting the right format, no battery charging, no touching or pushing buttons. (To be fair, there are also unpleasant aspects to reading a book from the library.)

However you choose to read— be it an e-reader or a print book—I hope that the experience is so rewarding that it will lead to you to an eternity of reading. And hopefully your reading experience will lead you to the library!

You Belong @Your Library

"More than just books and banks of computers, libraries are still places where individuals gather to explore, interact, and imagine." (Public Libraries, Nov/Dec 2011)

National Library Week, April 8-14, is a national observance celebrating libraries. Libraries have historically served as our nation's great equalizers of knowledge. Our strength has always been in the diversity of our collections and in our commitment to serving all people. This National Library Week, join us in celebrating the place where we all belong. Whether you're a job seeker looking for resources, a parent bringing your child to story time, a student searching for your next favorite book, or an arts lover attending a book discussion or musical performance, you belong @ your library!

The Jefferson Township Public Library strives to bring value to the community every day by offering a variety of programs and events in addition to print and digital information that is affordable, available and accessible to all people.

Notary Services

A Notary Public serves as an impartial witness to the signing of documents, and attests to the signature on the document. For your convenience, there is a Notary Public on staff at the library.

Last year 332 items were notarized at the library!

Please call ahead for notary hours.

What the Staff is Reading

Cursor's Fury* by Jim Butcher

Set in an ancient Roman society where all people have some magical control over the elements, this third book in the Codex Alera series is the best so far. When all the higher ranking officers are wiped out, our hero Tavi is thrust into command of an untested military unit facing one of the most vicious and formidable enemies of the empire. (Tony Punch)

The Sisters* by Nancy Jensen

Bertie and Mabel, two sisters with unspeakable secrets, are separated in their youth. The breach that separates them continues through generations of women with family bonds that are stretched to the limit. Jensen's debut has its flaws, but it's definitely a page-turner. (Pat McGraw)

Celebrity in Death* by J. D. Robb

The most recent Eve Dallas novel by Robb (who is also author Nora Roberts,) is a thriller in which the futuristic detective solves her latest murder involving the making of a movie based on one of her past cases. An intriguing mystery with humor and romance. (Gina Nardella)

The Sense of an Ending* by Julian Barnes

A profound and exquisite story about youth, time and memory, this Man Booker Prize winner grapples with universal truths by examining the life of one middle-aged man. (Chris O'Brien)

Killing Lincoln: The Shocking Assassination that Changed America Forever* by Bill O'Reilly

This historical account of the events surrounding President Lincoln's assassination includes many details previously unreported. Killing Lincoln reads like a thriller. I listened to it on audio, read by the author. (Diane Hess)

Classic Corner: The War of the Worlds

When Orson Welles and his Mercury Theater read The War of the Worlds by H. G. Wells on a 1938 radio show, it was mistaken for an actual news break and touched off a national panic. The dramatization of this seminal science fiction story was so vivid that Americans actually believed it, causing traffic jams as they fled the (fictional) invasion of the Martians.

Now almost a hundred years old and comparatively unsophisticated by today's science fiction standards, The War of the Worlds still holds up as a good read in spite of the charmingly naïve, romantic, and rather outdated fascination with Martians.

Or is it so outdated???

Meadowlarks

by Sara Teasdale

In the silver light after a storm,
Under dripping boughs of bright new green,
I take the low path to hear the meadowlarks
Alone and high-hearted as if I were a queen.

What have I to fear in life or death
Who have known three things: the kiss in the night,
The white flying joy when a song is born,
And meadowlarks whistling in silver light.

For Film Fans

Award-winning independent and foreign films are currently available for borrowing at the library through the library's subscription DVD service, Film Movement. We receive one film a month, and these films are released on DVD at the same time they open in theaters.

As fewer and fewer films receive wide releases, movie lovers often don't get to see many of the year's most remarkable films. The library is pleased to bring these films to the community.

Recently added films include Queen of Hearts (France); Protektor (Czech Republic); Letters to Father Jacob (Finland); The Piano Factory (China); and The Colors of the Mountain (Colombia).
